Dear UW Alumni and Friends,

Just in time for Labor Day, the American Institutes for Research (AIR) partnered with the AHI Travel Experts to bring you an enriching seven-night journey. From jazz musicians and club owners to writers and scholars, many African American expatriates felt welcome in Paris in the post-World War I era. Learn about their valuable contributions while taking rich history through legendary neighborhoods, including Montmartre and the Left Bank. During specially designed excursions, walk in the footsteps of African American luminaries, even at the site of the 369th Infantry Regiment’s famous performance at the Arc de Triomphe. Fly to Paris with AHI to experience a trip like none other.

After World War I, Parisians returned to their lives as jazz, a new sound introduced to France by African American soldiers. So they took to Paris, and jazz was unique. Jazz went on to become the perfect music to introduce to a fresh start, both for French music fans and American music lovers. The 369th Infantry Regiment is credited with transforming Paris' cultural scene. The unit became a part of the 369th and several individual soldiers were singled out for France’s highest award for valor. Off the battlefield, the band-based across France with music that would be known as jazz. For decades, Montmartre hosted the flourishing jazz community, which drew African American musicians and fans from the U.S. Several musicians left Paris during Germany’s World War II occupation, but the city’s love of jazz never wavered. Jazz surged again after the war with great African American musicians leading the way, and the music still delights concertgoers today.
